

“I am pleased to write this letter of recommendation for Stijn Janssen. He is very talented intellectually, extremely pragmatic and creative with regard to business judgment and very capable on an interpersonal level. This assessment is based on my observations of Stijn and the work product he created while a student in my Wharton class “Consulting with Growth Companies”. While there is a traditional academic dimension to the class, there is also a significant emphasis on practical considerations related to factors that drive rapid growth in entrepreneurial companies as students are assigned to teams who then consult with area growth companies.

Stijn shined in all regards in a class filled with highly talented peers and was very influential in helping to frame and execute the above noted consulting engagement. The result was a final consulting report that was thorough, professional and impactful. The substance of the report was outstanding and it was prepared in an articulate, easily assimilated and cosmetically appealing way. During the course of the consulting engagement, Stijn got along extremely well with the client and importantly, with his teammates. The client indicated his high degree of satisfaction with respect to the consulting engagement. Moreover, the team dynamic was excellent. This is not simply my view, but also the views of his three teammates as expressed in the Peer Review I ask all of my students to complete at the end of the semester.

I am pleased to recommend Stijn highly and without reservation.”

Eric Siegel

President, Siegel Management Company and Lecturer in Management, Wharton School